

Gary Kendall

'It's A Blues Life'

It started at the northern end of Highway 61, in Westfort, a working class neighbourhood in Fort William, Ontario, Canada, now part of Thunder Bay. Elvis Presley on The Ed Sullivan show in 1956, Muddy Waters, Willie Dixon and Sunnyland Slim on the CBC documentary "The Blues" ten years later. Music icons on a black and white television combined with a pastime of scanning the dial of an old radio, late at night in a basement bedroom, searching for exotic music from the American South. This is how Gary Kendall's journey into the world of Blues began. When other teenage boys went to weekend dances to meet girls, he stood off to the side watching the musicians on the bandstand. At age sixteen, six months after acquiring his first pawn shop electric guitar; he jumped at the chance to join a band called The Countdowns as the bassist. None of the other young musicians wanted the bass players job, Gary just wanted to be in a band and after making $20 at a Saturday night dance playing instrumental rock n roll the road map for his future occupation fell into place.

When the mid-sixties brought the British Invasion, it was The Rolling Stones that caught his ear and their music encouraged him to dig a little deeper and buy records by artists who were considered to be the first generation of the Blues. He joined a band called The Shameful Minority with long time friend, guitarist David Smyth. The record collection now included Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Elmore James, Willie Dixon, B.B. King, Little Walter, The Paul Butterfield Blues Band and many more.

In 1968, Gary Kendall moved to Toronto, the city he now calls home. By 1971, as a member of The James Hartley Band, he was playing the legendary Grossman's Tavern on Spadina Ave and other blues bars in Toronto. The Hartley Band also headed out on the road playing the rough and tumble, six nights a week, five sets a night barroom scene that existed in those days. The Downchild Blues Band was at the top of the Toronto blues scene and he quickly became friends with all the band members, brought together by a mutual respect for the music and the art forms originators.

By 1974 he had become the bandleader by default of Dollars, a loose party band that played a mix of blues, swing and R&B. It was with that group while holding down a brief residency in a basement bar, The Meet Market, beneath the legendary Colonial Tavern, that a friendship was struck with Muddy Waters guitarist, Bob Margolin. (Muddy was upstairs in the main room), a musical connection that continues to this day. Bob arranged for Gary to sit in with Muddy and his band that along with Margolin featured top of the line blues sidemen, Pinetop Perkins, Jerry Portnoy, Willie "Big Eyes" Smith, Luther "Guitar Junior" Johnson and Calvin "Fuzz" Jones.

The privilege to play with one of his heroes is a strong and important memory that has stayed with him throughout his entire career. A few months later the basement bar brought in Sunnyland Slim, an artist first seen on television with Muddy Waters back in 1966. He was thrilled when his band was asked to back up Sunnyland and Bonnie Bombshell for a week.

In late 1979 the opportunity to join The Downchild Blues Band became a reality. The chance to play with old friends in one of his favourite bands seemed like a dream come true. He stayed until 1983, recording four albums, 'We Deliver', 'Road Fever', 'Blood Run Hot' and 'But, I'm On The Guest List'.

From the mid-80's to the early 90's, Gary stayed off the road, holding down a house gig at Toronto's, Black Swan Tavern with The Kendall Wall Band. A group he formed with ex-

Downchild drummer Cash Wall and harmonica ace Jeff Baker. The revolving KWB guitar chair was held by Richard Smyth, Mike McKenna, Teddy Leonard, Kevin Higgins and Chris Burgess. Their Saturday Afternoon Blues Matinee's at the Swan became legendary.

In those days touring acts came to Toronto for a week to play at Albert's Hall and most of those bandleaders came over to the Swan as special guests on Saturday afternoon. This stroke of good luck gave KWB the opportunity to play with A. C. Reed, Pinetop Perkins, Eddy Clearwater, Tinsley Ellis, Little Willie Littlefield, Chubby Carrier, Bernard Allison, Eddie C. Campbell, Lefty Dizz, Eddie "Clean Head" Vinson, Eddie Shaw, Carey Bell, Fenton Robinson and many more. This also led to KWB being used by that era's popular blues venues Albert's Hall, Pop The Gator, Blues & Cues and The Bermuda Onion as a back up band for Luther 'Guitar Junior' Johnson, Snooky Pryor, Big Jay McNealey, Honkin' Joe Houston, Eddie Kirkland, Phil Guy and Cash McCall.

In 2012, Gary Kendall dug back into the old and almost lost recordings of The Kendall Wall Band and released The Way We Was. A documentary on the recording process and the history of the band accompanied that recording.
